To the Editor: Re “What’s Behind China’s Surging Abortion Rate?” (front page, May 7): In China, the government is undertaking a review of the nation’s child-birthing policies and may ultimately relax restrictions on abortions. The report for the review was released earlier this year and begins with an acknowledgement that “in the last few years, the birth of a child in China has become increasingly out of control, especially in the countryside.” The report recognizes the difficulty in changing China’s problematic policies on child birth while also acknowledging that these policies are said to have contributed to a declining birth rate and a spike in abortion rates. It acknowledges that there have been an estimated 200 million abortions performed since 1982, and that the number of abortions are steadily rising. Perhaps this is why the article’s title is so misleading. While it’s true that increased childbearing is one of the causes of the increase in the abortion rate, the article fails to mention that the population has also increased. Another key factor in China’s troubling child-bearing policies is that the Chinese government refuses to report on the status of the rapidly growing abortion rate for fear of a backlash at home and abroad. In light of this, it is past time for the government to accept an independent investigation into the increase in the abortion rate and to be honest with the Chinese people about the true state of affairs. As a historian and a mother, I am proud of the progress that our society has made since 1979, when China was so closely tied to Mao’s policies.
